W. N. BEASLEY SPOKE IN COURT HOUSE FRIDAY

Audience Small; Made Good Impression, Went from Here to Jamestown.

J. N. Beasley, republican candidate for Railroad and Public Utilities Commissioner, spoke here Friday at one o'clock to a small audience.

While Mr. Beasley did not attempt and flights of oratory, he did hand out some very sensible and logical utterances. He stated that since he was appointed to the Railroad and Utilities board he had delved into matters some and found that the Memphis Railway and Light Company had their property listed at $7,000,000 for taxable purposes, but for $1,000,000 for the purpose of determining the rate of interest they are entitled to earn. Mr. Beasley felt that to be unjust to the people of Memphis and took such steps as caused the street railway to reduce its fare to a point where it saved the people of Memphis $140,000 in a single year. He stated that because of that the president of the street railway had made the statement that he would defeat Beasley if it cost $100,000 to do it.

Mr. Beasley made it clear that he had no animosity toward any corporation because of its being a corporation, but felt that corporations should obey the law the same as individuals. That was all he was attempting and nothing any corporation could do would divert him from that course so long as he was on the commission.

He further stated that his democratic opponent, Porter Dunlap, is going over the state with Austin Peay candidate for governor, but is making no speeches or telling the people anything as to how he stands on any subject touching the office he seeks. Mr. Beasley stated that he had repeatedly tried to draw Mr. Dunlap out on certain points, but Mr. Dunlap had remained silent up to that time.

REV. W. H. BLUE RETURNED TO CROSSVILLE FOR NEXT YEAR

The Tennessee Conference of the M. E. Church, South, closed its labors at Fayetteville Saturday and the assignment of pastors was given out. It will be very gratifying to many here to know that Rev. W. H. Blue was assigned to this charge for another year. Since the people here, regardless of church affiliations, signed a strong petition requesting his return, it was felt very likely that our people would have the pleasure of his being here with us for another year.

In the year that has just passed Rev. Blue has endeared himself to our people regardless of church, by his hearty and energetic work and the genial and kindly manner manifested to all.

CAPT. PECK TALKS ABOUT

Destroying Hog Cholera

Talks to Farmers by T. F. Peck, Commissioner of Agriculture.

The farmers of Tennessee have suffered untold losses from hog cholera. These losses could have been materially reduced if all the owners had followed careful treatment and obeyed a few simple sanitary measures.

Hog cholera is a contagious disease of swine.

The micro-organisms must be present in order for Cholera to develop. All breeds of hogs are susceptible to the disease.

The death rate is high and the losses may be rapid.

The sick hogs have a high fever. They are listless, and will pile up together. Their ears become drooped and the general appetite disappears.

If your hogs look suspicious call your local veterinarian and be guided by his advice. He will explain to you the value of vaccination and how to improve local sanitary conditions.

Sanitation plays an important part. It prevents the spread of cholera and renders your premises safe for the next year. Hogs with cholera should not be allowed to wander. They spread the disease broadcast and cause it to appear where heretofore it was unknown.

If you raise hogs make it a point to prevent cholera. Follow the advice of the Bureau of Animal Industry, the State Veterinarian, and freely consult your local veterinarian. Don't let your sick hogs scatter the disease to other herds. Establish an honor quarantine of your own and don't let your neighbors wallow through your hog lot. By doing so they go home and infect their herd.

When a hog dies, bury the carcass in lime or burn it. Don't let other hogs, chickens, dogs or buzzards eat it.

Just a little common sense will protect your neighbors.

Remember when you turn your hogs out on the open range, you expose them to disease. The free range may prove to be very costly to you. Protect your herd. They are worth it and the revenues will pay you large profits. Remember hog cholera can be prevented by vaccination and sanitation and it is up to every individual hog raiser to do his part.

Give the hog a chance. Don't force him to live in filthy places. Drain off the old wallow holes and cess pools and freely spray the walls and floors of pens. Hogs will keep clean if you let them and consequently the chances for cholera will be greatly lessened.

For further information write either the U. S. Bureau of Animal Industry, Nashville, Tenn., or to the State Veterinarian, Nashville. When an outbreak occurs in your vicinity we will help you if you will let us know.
